SIGN UP FOR WOLF ROAD ROUTE

Cleveland and McCord Interests Convey Property For Wolf Rd.
Route; State to Continue Paving

Supervisor Fred A. Francis of New Lenox, chairman of the Will County Bond Issue committee, advises that the C. M. Cleveland and McCord interests, signed deeds Tuesday, conveying to Will County, the land needed for the Wolf Road right-of-way from the point where the present paving of Wolf Road south of Hickory creek ends, to the Lincoln highway. Mr. Cleveland has also deeded to the county, land south of the Lincoln highway for the extension of the Wolf Road paving to connect with Route 51.

James Owen is expected to deed to the county by the week end, land on his property for the Wolf Road right-of-way, which it is understood will complete the route to the Lincoln highway.

The Will County Highway engineer's office has completed plans for the paving of Wolf Road to the connection with Lincoln highway.

It is understood that the extension of Wolf Road south to route 51 is on the state highway program for next year and will be carried out in 1936.

Active work on completing the paving of Wolf Road to the Lincoln highway will be begun early next spring. Letting of contract will undoubtedly be done this fall.

The Wolf Road is the last piece of road to be paved on the Will County bond issue program. This highway has been a bitter bone of contention among various factions and after a fight extending over seven years, the various difficulties have been ironed out and the completion of the highway is assured.

With the completion of this highway in Will county, efforts will be made to have Cook county carry on the paving of Wolf Road north from 143rd street in Orland township to connect with the paving already laid further north. When this is done Wolf Road will become the great artery belt line highway connecting with all highways entering Chicago, as its founders have so often pointed out.

ESCORT AND GIRL IDENTIFY ATTACKER

Michael Lipinski, 23 years old, of 12345 South Winchester avenue, Chicago, a paroled Indiana burglar identified by an 18-year-old girl as the man who kidnaped and assaulted her early Sunday, was viewed by recent victims of a prowler in the Calumet and Kensington districts.

Lipinski, who was arrested on a description given police by Miss Josephine Seidel, 18 years old, 12743 South Western avenue, Blue Island, who told police that the man who had attacked her twice in an automobile wore an onyx ring with the initial "M" on it.

Parole Sponsor Causes Arrest
Russell L. Higgins, to whom Lipinski was paroled, recalled he had such a ring and brought about the man's arrest in a bakery at 12247 South Halsted street, where he was employed. He had a long scratch on his face corresponding with the one Miss Seidel said she inflicted on her assailant with a screw driver.

Lipinski appeared startled when identified by Miss Seidel, and later by Urban Kimmel, 20 years old, of Tinley Park, her escort, who had been robbed of his car Saturday night.

Kimmel was ejected from his car at 111th street and Cicero avenue by the armed attacker, who entered the car at a Blue Island dance hall, and who later drove aimlessly through western suburbs with Miss Seidel for nine hours, attacking her twice.

Lipinski served a four-year term for burglary in Hartford, Ind., and was paroled six months ago.

MOKENA TO VOTE ON BOND ISSUE
DECEMBER 19

The Mokena Village Board passed an ordinance Tuesday night calling for a special election to be held on Thursday, December 19th, 1935 at the village hall for the purpose of authorizing the floating of a bond issue for $3,000, the corporate bonds to be for the purposes of paying the indebtedness incurred by the village for the surfacing and repairing of certain streets in the village and for other corporate purposes.

The bonds are to run from 1936 to 1942 and are to be paid off at the rate of $500 for each year. The bonds are to be paid for thru direct taxation, but the small amount the extra tax will amount too will not be noticeable in the village taxes.

The voters and property owners of the village should vote in favor of the bond issue. Failure to support it will mean that the village will be unable to pay its obligations and to carry on further improvements. All the indebtedness incurred was absolutely necessary. The village streets were a disgrace and the expenses made are a good investment as it means much to a community to have good streets.

The village must keep abreast with the times and no improvements can be made without expenses.

The following have been appointed on the election board for the special election to be held December 19th:

Judges: Erhart Oswald, John Mattes, George Knudson, Clerks, George Walsh and Ona E. McGovney. The polls will open at 6 a. m., and will close at 5 p. m.

Frankfort Band
Concert Draws Enthusiastic Crowd

The thrill of a fall season in the way of a band concert is still being felt.

The Frankfort band held a concert November 2, 1935 at 8 p. m. in the Frankfort public school auditorium. The concert was short and snappy. The people called for more encores.

The most popular piece in the program was "The Stars and Stripes Forever." It was the last number played in the concert.

Those not present failed to hear a good concert. There was a pretty good crowd considering that it was held on a Saturday evening. We urge all you people who were not present Saturday evening to come out and hear some good music played by your own Frankfort band. When you boost your band your are boosting your community.

The quilt which will be given at the next card party sometime this month by the Frankfort Musical organization was exhibited at the concert.

Police Question
Youths About
Halloween Prank

A pre-Hallowe'en prank which might have had disastrous results, got a number of Orland boys into a tight jam.

Last Tuesday evening a group of boys opened barrels on the Wabash subway bridge containing chloride used for fire extinguishing purposes and poured the fluid on a group of children walking thru the subway on their way from a Hallowe'en party in the Earl Reich home.

Fortunately none of the fluid struck the children in their faces, but it did ruin their costumes.

Mayor Wm. Kollman was notified of the affair the next morning and the county highway police at Willow Springs were notified. They came to the Orland public school Wednesday morning and took a number of boys suspected of being implicated in the fluid throwing affair, out of school and over to police headquarters in Willow Springs for questioning.

The boys at first denied all guilt, but later confessed and implicated others. The police gave them a severe reprimand and pointed out to them the serious results which might have resulted from the prank and then released the boys.

Interesting Speaker
Addresses Orland
Woman's Club

The American Home department with Mrs. Harold Kinney as chairman presented Miss Jean Adaire of the Household Utilities department of Marshall Field & Co., who spoke on home making and home economy. Her discussion was full of sound advice and reasonable ideas.

She said that $300,000 was spent in this country every minute for household utilities and that even in the most reputable stores some goods were usable and durable and others useless and inferior and that women should know and thoroughly understand what they are buying.

The whole economic structure of the country will be organized when women use wisdom and common sense in making their purchases.

She said that the time had come for women to begin inventing their own gadgets and equipment even to the smallest item in the kitchen as it is they who know what tools are needed and what improvements should be made on oldfashioned utilities.

In illustrating the need for prevention of waste it was pointed out that such prevention begins in the kitchen. Work was carried on in New York City and it was found that there was enough reclaimable food in the garbage to feed the entire city for a year.

A workable and intelligent budget was advised in the elimination of waste.

Miss Adaire has organized a new department at Fields and is glad to help anyone in the purchasing of any article for the kitchen.

Mrs. Donald DeMuth, 3rd district chairman of the American Home department read a paper on the American Home which concluded the program.

Tea and cookies were served by the hostesses Mrs. David Agate, Mrs. John Humphrey and Mrs. Harold Kinney, Mrs. Ella Loebe and Mrs. Frank Moore poured.

Two other events on the club's calendar for the next month are a Silver Tea at the home of Mrs. Edgar Graves on Friday afternoon November 22 and a tour through the Oak Forest institution December 3rd.

Bedtime Story for Children

By THORNTON W. BURGESS

LIGHTFOOT AND PADDY BECOME PARTNERS

THE instant Lightfoot the Deer saw Paddy the Beaver he knew that, for the true being at least, there was no danger. He knew that Paddy is one of the shyest of all the little people of the Green Forest and that when he is found working in the daytime it means that he has been undisturbed for a long time. Otherwise he would work only at night.

Paddy saw Lightfoot almost as soon as he stepped out on the bank. He kept right on swimming with the branch of a poplar tree until he reached his food pile, which, you know, is in the water. There he forced the branch down until it was held by other branches already sunken in the pond. This done, he swam over to where Lightfoot was watching. "Hello, Lightfoot!" he exclaimed. "You are looking handsomer than ever. How are you feeling these fine autumn days?"

"Anxious," replied Lightfoot. "I am feeling terribly anxious. Do you know what day this is?"

"No," replied Paddy. "I don't know what day it is and I don't particularly care. It is enough for me that it is one of the finest days we've had for a long time."

"I wish I could feel that way," said Lightfoot wistfully. "I wish I could feel that way, Paddy, but I can't. No, sir, I can't. You see, this is the first of the most dreadful days in all the year for me. The hunters started looking for me before Mr. Sun was really out of bed. At least one hunter did and I don't doubt there are others. I fooled that one, but from now to the end of the hunting season there will not be a single moment of daylight when I will feel absolutely safe."

Paddy crept out on the bank and chewed a little twig of poplar thoughtfully. Paddy says he can always think better if he is chewing something. "That's bad news, Lightfoot. I'm sorry to hear it, I certainly am sorry to hear it," said Paddy. "Why anybody wants to hunt such a hand-

Dear Mr. Wynn:

Would you be kind enough to settle an argument between my wife and me? I say a person with great talent and a genius are one and the same thing, while my wife says there is a vast difference between the two. Who is right, and why?

Yours truly,

Answer: Your wife is right. The difference between talent and genius is that talent gets paid every Saturday.

Dear Mr. Wynn:

I bought a horse yesterday at a sale, and drove him home. He kept stopping every few minutes. Today I took him out again and he did the same thing. What do you think is wrong with him?

Sincerely,

Answer: He is probably deaf and is afraid he won't hear you say whoa, so he just stops to listen.

Dear Mr. Wynn:

Can you tell me what is meant by a crazy bone?

Truly yours,

Answer: A crazy bone is a dollar spent foolishly.

Dear Mr. Wynn:

This morning I tried to see how long I could stand on my head. After three minutes I had to give up because the blood rushed to my head. When I stand on my feet how is it the blood doesn't rush there?

Yours truly,

Answer: Your feet are not empty.

Dear Mr. Wynn:

I am an artist. I entered a contest but my painting did not get a prize. The men who judged the paintings were not artists. Do you think it possible for men to tell a good or bad painting when they can't paint one themselves.

A FEW DESSERTS

A MEAL is unfinished without something in sweets or a made dessert to end the meal.

Adam's Cream Pie.

Scald one cupful of milk, add one cupful of sugar and one-eighth teaspoonful of salt. Mix two teaspoonfuls of corn starch with a little cold milk; add to the scalded milk, stirring constantly. Cook until smooth; then pour on two well-beaten eggs mixed with a cupful of cream; pour into a pastry lined tin and sprinkle with cinnamon. Bake until firm in the center. Remove at once from the oven and serve cold.

Steamed Cherry Pudding.

Drain canned cherries from the sirup. Make a batter of one cupful of flour, one teaspoonful of baking powder, one-fourth teaspoonful of salt and milk to mix into a drop batter. Butter pudding cups and add a tablespoonful of the mixture, then a tablespoonful of the cherries—a bit of juice with them will not matter. Cover with another spoonful of batter, leaving plenty of room in the cup for rising. Set the cups into hot water, cover closely and boil fifteen minutes. Use the juice lightly thickened for the sauce, adding a little butter.

Orange Rounds.

Cut rounds from rich pastry and bake. Put together with orange filling prepared as follows: Melt four tablespoonfuls of butter in a saucepan, add five tablespoonfuls of sugar, the juice of one orange and half of the grated rind. Beat in the yolks of three eggs, stirring constantly, add two tablespoonfuls of finely chopped or grated candied orange peel and two tablespoonfuls of chopped candied pineapple, stir and cook until the filling is thick enough to spread. Use as filling for two rounds of the pastry.

Equine Giants Win Championship

THERE are giants, still—these days—in the horse world—great one-ton giants that still bear burdens for us, just as man's oldest, most useful friend has always done. And a new world's heavyweight championship record was made in the work horse world, at Hillsdale County fair, Michigan, recently when two giants, Rock and Tom, trained by Russell Sando of Piqua, Ohio, defeated the giant champions of the East and hauled a load of 25½ tons for 20 consecutive starts. A "dynamometer," operated by Michigan State college, was used to measure the pulls scientifically. Expert horsemen and engineers were all amazed at this record. Rock and Tom are here shown doing their stunt.

Find Out

From Your Doctor if the "Pain" Remedy You Take Is Safe.

Don't Entrust Your Own or Your Family's Well-Being to Unknown Preparations

BEFORE you take any preparation you don't know all about, for the relief of headaches; or the pains of rheumatism, neuritis or neuralgia, ask your doctor what he thinks about it—in comparison with Genuine Bayer Aspirin.

We say this because, before the discovery of Bayer Aspirin, most so-called "pain" remedies were advised against by physicians as being bad for the stomach; or, often, for the heart. And the discovery of Bayer Aspirin largely changed medical practice.

Countless thousands of people who have taken Bayer Aspirin year in and out without ill effect, have proved that the medical findings about its safety were correct.

Remember this: Genuine Bayer Aspirin is rated among the fastest methods yet discovered for the relief of headaches and all common pains . . . and safe for the average person to take regularly.

You can get real Bayer Aspirin at any drug store—simply by never asking for it by the name "aspirin" alone, but always saying BAYER ASPIRIN when you buy.

Try them when you feel the effects of last night's party, or when you smoke too much. Tums contain a wonderful antacid which neutralizes acid in the stomach, but never over-alkalizes stomach or blood. As pleasant to eat as candy and only 10¢ at any drug store.

SYNOPSIS

As Alan Garth, prospector, is preparing to leave for his mining claim in the Far North, a plane lands at the airways emergency station. In it are Burton Ramill, millionaire mining magnate; his daughter, Lilith; and Vivian Huxby, pilot and mining engineer. Believing him to be only an ignorant prospector, the men offer to make an air trip to Garth's claim, although they refer to his samples of platinum-bearing ore as nearly "worthless." Lilith Ramill, product of the jazz age, plainly shows her contempt for Garth.

The girl stopped in the entrance to peer around the cubbyhole kitchen, her scarlet-smeared lips curled with disgust. Though soap-clean, everything in the place looked crude. The air was choky from the smell of cheap bacon.

Huxby sprang up to place the chair at the near end of the table. He lifted the boiling teapot from the stove and started to fill a tin cup with the black brew.

"Pardon our not waiting, Lilith," he apologized. "I did not wish to waken you with the refueling. Planned to do it while you breakfasted."

"Quite thoughtful of you, darling. But you need not think I'll drink this lye or eat any of these beastly messes. Not for me. You can have your steerage garbage. I'll keep to cabin fare."

She faced about and went back through the passage. Huxby stood hesitating. Mr. Ramill motioned him to sit down.

"You stocked the cabin with enough wines and delicatessen to last several days. Finish your meal."

The mining engineer shot a glance at Garth. "I've had enough oats to founder a Scotch cow. May as well see to the refueling."

Tobin rose stiffly and followed Huxby into the storeroom. Mr. Ramill took a last sip of the boiled tea, favored Garth with a patronizing smile, and opened his gold-mounted cigar case to offer one of the choice Havanas.

Garth declined. "I never smoke. It deadens the nose."

"Deadens—What's that?" "Though man has the sense of smell, compared with dogs he lacks the ability to scent. Yet even a trace of it may be of use in the bush."

The investor's portly body quivered to his chuckle. "I've heard of nosing out prospects! First time, though, it's been done to my knowledge." He caught himself up. "At least, Mr. Huxby considers it possible your discovery may be worth an examination. That leaves only the question of terms, in case we find the mine promising enough for me to make an offer."

Garth spared an inquiring glance. The portly gentleman gave him a bland smile.

"I believe in encouraging prospectors. They find new districts. With that in view, I buy numbers of undeveloped prospects, taking the risk of heavy losses. Though I drop thousands on some mines, I have made a fortune from others. But the average prospector, like yourself, stakes his all. Ninety-nine times in a hundred, he is cleaned out by total failure. If your lode looks at all possible, I'll pay you up to a thousand dollars cash for it."

"I'm not selling," Garth said. "I like to play a game through to the end, win or lose."

The investor's eyes hardened. "What's your idea?"

"One year's lease, and sixty per cent of the gross returns to me."

Mr. Ramill blinked. "Sixty per cent of gross! You're crazy!"

"Like a fox. Same kind of nose." It was Garth's turn to smile. "Not so keen, though, for galena. Better for scenting out alloys of gold, iridium and—platinum."

The last word knocked the benevolent encourager of prospectors speechless. Yet, after a moment of blank staring, he managed a half-pitying look.

"Daft!" he muttered. "That must be it. These prospectors, alone in the wilds for months at a time!" He raised his voice. "Too bad, young man. If you'd make it gold and silver, I might have been able to swallow the bait. But platinum! That's a bit too thick. Platinum is found in quantity only in Russia. Very little anywhere else. Only a minute quantity in North America."

He rose as if to go. Garth gave him a regretful look.

"Yes—too bad, sir. Now I'll have to go outside. I may even have to wait until the ice goes out next year before I can dupe a gull into taking that lease."

Mr. Ramill left the kitchen without seeming to heed this plaint. When Garth followed him into the storeroom, he was quieting some dispute between Huxby and Tobin. The visitors put on their headnets and walked down to the wharf.

Garth went into the bunkroom. Before long Tobin came to open the door a handbreadth. He chuckled.

"Uh—lad, you got your hook in their gills. Pilot's tinkering with the motor. Changed the oil, but no move to re-fuel. Ain't rushin' to flop off."

Garth kept on lathering his beard.

When he came out, his cartridge belt was buckled about his waist. It held his sheath-knife and belt-ax. In one hand he carried his rifle, in the other the rest of his small outfit, strapped on his pack board.

Down on the wharf Mr. Ramill puffed cigar smoke through his headnet while he watched Huxby's examination of the motor and propeller. Miss Ramill was not in sight.

"Right-o, Tobin," said Garth. "Shaming it is. When that bus came down, you never heard a sweeter motor—every cylinder hitting true. Wish I felt as sure of that southbound Belanca."

"Don't fash yourself, Mr. Garth. She'll make Fort Smith on schedule."

"Then here goes for my next play."

He went down the slope to lay his pack and rifle a little way out from the base of the wharf. After that he fetched his canoe from the bank. He swung it down into the shallow water within close reach of the pack.

Mr. Ramill came shoreward rather hurriedly for so dignified a gentleman. "One moment, Garth. I've consulted with my engineer partner. He still thinks it may be worth our while to investigate your prospect."

"What! In view of my terms?"

"They're outrageous! Still, it is just possible the—er—mine might justify them. The least we can do is to inspect the lode. I make no deals sight unseen."

Garth spoke as if to himself: "An air ride, free, and only a few hours' delay. Time enough to make the trip out before the freeze-up."

He lifted his pack up again on the wharf, and swung the canoe over his head to take it back to its previous position, bottom up, on the bank. When he returned he carried his pack and rifle out to the airplane. From the cabin came the rhythmic dissonance of a jazz-dance tune. The plane evidently was equipped with a long-distance radio receiver.

Through the wire gauze of the big rear window he saw Miss Ramill reclining on the heaped pillows of an unmade berth. The shelf at her elbow held tinned and package foods and a wine bottle. Garth laid down his rifle and pack on the wharf near the door-steps.

Ashore, at the storeroom, he found Huxby trying to boss Tobin into helping tote the gasoline. Annoyed by the old man's refusal, and still more by the indignity of mechanic's labor, the pilot engineer took up a case of twin five-gallon gasoline tins in his arms and started cautiously down the slope to the wharf.

Had Garth taken the same load, either he or Huxby would have had to return for the other two cases. He roped three cases together and tipped the thirty-gallon load upon his back. As if the pack had been a featherweight, he went down the stony slope with the smooth gliding step of a moccasin wearer.

Out at the end of the wharf, a deaf stoop and twist lowered his heavy pack upon the planks without a jar. As he straightened up he saw Miss Ramill step down from the cabin. She had donned her leather pilot trousers and jacket but held the helmet in her hand.

Through the mesh of her headnet he saw that her eyes were lustrous from wine. They gazed out at him with a look of reluctant admiration. No man of her acquaintance had ever toted such a back-breaking pack, either lightly or at all. But her forced respect gave place to a show of disdain when he ventured a friendly smile.

"How gallant!" she jeered. "He has sacrificed his whiskers. Can it be he hopes to enervate the fair sex?"

"Was that why I shaved?" Garth inquired. "Feminine intuition is wonderful. I thought I did it to make dozing easier."

"Oh, you mean what they call fly dope. But I see none of the sticky or smelly mess they tell about. Your face looks clean."

"Thanks for the compliment. But I'll soon have to take to the usual grease and spruce pitch. Just used the last of my froggie."

The girl flushed with resentment. "Froggie! Don't lie to me. I know how you westerners tell fantastic falsehoods to tenderfeet."

"You do? By the way, in the North we say chechahcos, not tenderfeet. As for the froggie, it's no fancy. Years ago, Seton remarked the fact that mosquitoes never sting frogs. I—er—I know a man who experimented and who finally obtained chemically the substance exuded by the skin of frogs. Too bad I've run out of the dope. There are plenty of pests where we are going. You'll have to keep behind your nets—or take to grease and pitch."

Before the girl could reply, Huxby called down for more gasoline. He had managed to get one tin of his case up to the cockpit and had emptied it into a wing tank.

Garth swung up to him with a whole case balanced on his shoulder. It was far easier than totting a deer over broken country. After hoisting aboard the other cases and Huxby's second tin, he ducked under the front strut of the wing. His rifle and pack lay where he had left them.

The radio had been tuned in on what probably was the Edmonton relay of the London metal market report. The announcer started to give the last quoted price on platinum: "Refined platinum, per troy ounce, twelve pounds, seven shillings and—"

A whine and shriek like static cut across the voice. The loud-speaker blared into jazz.

Splashes told that Huxby was tossing the empty cans and cases into the river, instead of down on the wharf. That small yet wanton waste proved that the mining engineer was a stranger in the North.

Garth stooped forward under the wing strut with his rifle. Miss Ramill stood with her very artificially waved semi-bobbed hair bared to the breeze. Upon taking off her mosquito net to put on the leather flying helmet, a swarm of insects had at once attacked her. She was trying to flit them off in order to replace the protecting gauze.

"D—n your North country!" she exploded.

"Wait till you reach one of our muskew swamps, Miss Ramill. You'll call this heaven. But why the flying suit? Going to pilot the bus?"

"Is that any of your business?"

"None whatever. Pardon my impertinent curiosity. Only, as there are not three seats in the cockpit, I was moved to wonder if you, instead of your fiancée, are to be my riding mate."

"Yours!"

"How else? Or does the gentleman imagine he can find my prospect without a guide?"

"Dad will make you give Vivian your route map. I'll not let you have my seat."

This time Garth did not smile. The girl was due for a lesson. "Suit yourself—and tell Huxby he can head for the North pole."

"Indeed!"

"Quite so. He and your father can go there, or to the other place—and you with them. You're not only a selfish snob. You're a brainless fool to fancy a southern pilot can back-trail a canoe-route through unmapped forest and muskew country."

The girl's blue eyes flared with outraged pride and vanity. Garth smiled. He had paid her back in full for her arrogance. It was worth waiting over until another season for his fortune, up in that hidden valley of the Rockies.

But before he could stoop under the strut to recover his pack from the cabin, the girl called out to him: "Wait. I did not understand. If it's really necessary for you to act as Vivian's guide—But you had no call to be so rude."

Though he turned back, it was with no intention of bumbling himself. He was not duped by her seeming change to amiability. It had been too sudden for sincerity.

"A woman has no more right to be rude than has a man," he replied. "When I hear you apologize, I'll consider whether an apology is due from me."

The smile left her rouge-smeared lips. He had never before seen so disagreeable a look on any woman's face. But before she could find words to vent her feelings, Huxby peered down over the side of the cockpit, flushed from exertion and annoyance.

"Don't be all day, Garth. Cast off the lines.—Sorry, Lilith, that I'm not to have your company."

"Don't worry, old dear," she said.

"This wootsy pest will soon be a thing of the past. Only a few hours of the affliction, and we'll be rid of him."

CHAPTER II

Treachery.

Garth followed Miss Ramill in under the monoplane's wing. He did not offer to hand the girl up into the cabin or help ship the steps. Women's rights did not include courtesies in return for insults.

He cast off the tail mooring line and swung aboard, with the coiled rope and his rifle. As the plane drifted clear, the breeze swerved it head off from shore. Huxby paused a moment to jerk out a question: "Route?"

For answer, Garth pointed westerly. Huxby set the propeller whirling with the self-starter. With rapidly increasing headway, the plane skimmed out on the smooth river.

Rifle between knees, Garth settled down upon the cockpit seat at the pilot's elbow. Huxby was first to speak. When the plane soared above the west bank of the great river, he leaned close to shout a repetition of his question: "Route?"

Garth looked overside before pointing. The plane had climbed nearly a thousand feet.

Even to a man who had spent years in the North, this view of the sub-arctic landscape was a puzzling maze. On the ground, Garth would have had slight trouble retracing the course he had followed in and out of the wilderness. From the air, everything looked different. For all his flying experience, Garth could not, as he had expected, strike a beeline. Though he knew the general direction of his find, he was unable to guide the plane as the crow flies.

At his sign to bank, Huxby frowned but brought the plane around in a wide curve. Very soon, upriver from the refueling station, Garth sighted the small swamp stream on which he had begun and ended his trip into the unknown. This was a familiar point of departure. From it he again directed the pilot to the westward.

Somewhat under an hour later, the swamps and low ridges ended at the upheave of an eastward thrust mountain range. A near view of the barren peaks caused Garth to twist the course about on a sharp angle to the southwest. Those mountains had not appeared any too familiar. The difficulty of finding landmarks recognizable from the air had not lessened. For days on his trip in and out, he had traveled through dense forests of spruce that shut off almost all wide views, even of the mountains.

The westward rise of the country had by now forced the plane up another thousand feet. Higher slopes ahead called for still more altitude. The jagged skyline reared a thousand feet or more higher than the plane. Huxby started to climb. Until within a mile of the savage cliffs he ignored Garth's advice to lessen the angle. Then, as the plane swept past an out-jutting peak on the right, Garth signed towards the gap between it and the main mass.

The highest point of the pass was more than half a thousand feet lower than the plane. Huxby pushed the stick forward and shot down for the gap on a long slant. The monoplane soon drove in between the towering precipices and steeply pitched side slopes of the immense cleft. A little more, and the cleft crooked to the north. The plane banked around the turn. Below the bend the cleft widened in the neve of a glacier. Farther down the expanse of snow-ice pinched into a narrow gulch. The gulch ran down into a deep mountain-rimmed valley. Down the rough bed tumbled a stream of milky glacier water.

Garth noted moving dots on the tundra and white specks up on the rocky slopes above them. But Huxby saw neither the caribou nor the mountain sheep. He had at once spotted the lake in the valley bottom. He angled on down as if to plunge into the silvery sparkling ripples of the lake. The monoplane swooped above the upper shore and drove on towards the foot of the lake at full speed. Garth pointed to the intake from the glacier stream, and signed for a descent.

Snail, a Mollusk, Belongs to Land, Water Variety

A snail is a mollusk and properly belongs only to mollusks living on land or in fresh water, which, says a writer in the Montreal Herald, are classified as Pulmonates because they have lungs (Latin, pulmo) and breathe air instead of extracting oxygen from water by means of gills as do the sea-mollusks. These pulmonates are of three kinds: 1, those living on land; 2, those living in fresh water; 3, slugs. Both of the first two are protected by shells to which they are permanently attached, yet may extend the body to some distance outside of them. The third kind (slugs) have no visible shell, only a small plate beneath the skin, and are wholly terrestrial. All these are virtually alike in internal structure, subsist mainly on vegetable food, are of two sexes, and reproduce by means of eggs.

As a snail, carrying its shell up-right on its back, crawls slowly along all we see of it is the squarish head at the forward end of a soft but muscular, tapering body called the "foot," the under surface of which is a tough, elastic sole by slight movement of which the animal hitches itself forward.

"Clermont," Fulton's Steamboat The steamboat built by Robert Fulton was called the "Clermont."

VANITY JUSTIFIED

If vanity is ever justifiable, it is in having a face that leads a reserved and reticent boy to tell his troubles to you.

DOCTORS KNOW

Mothers read this:

Why do people come home from a hospital with bowels working like a well-regulated watch?

The answer is simple, and it's the answer to all your bowel worries if you will only realize it: many doctors and hospitals use liquid laxatives.

If you knew what a doctor knows, you would use only the liquid form. A liquid can always be taken in gradually reduced doses. Reduced dosage is the secret of any real relief from constipation.

Ask a doctor about this. Ask your druggist how very popular liquid laxatives have become. They give the right kind of help, and right amount of help. The liquid laxative generally used is Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin. It contains senna and cascara—both natural laxatives that can form no habit, even in children. So, try Syrup Pepsin. You just take regulated doses till Nature restores regularity.

FEATURES

This week we are inter viewing Kurt Hellmuth and David Tierney. Kurt was interviewed first. Here are the questions and the answers that were given: What is your age? I'm 14 years old. What grade are you in? I'm a sophomore in high school. Have you always attended the Mokena school? No I have not. Did you ever play on another basketball team? No. What position do you play? I play right forward this year. In the game with Joliet last year, Kurt scored the only field goal for Mokena. He received injuries which prevented his playing in all the games.

Here is what we found out about David: He is 15 years old and in the 9th grade. He has never played on another team, but he has attended another school. He plays right forward also. David is the only boy that came into the high school this year that played on the grade team last year.

The Press— Guardian of Liberty

By RAYMOND PITCAIRN
National Chairman
Sentinels of the Republic

Steadily the dark stain of censorship is spreading over the newspapers of Europe.

What is the result? The headlines tell. Let's see what dispatches from the nations that have shackled their Press describe:

War—imperialistic war . . . religious intolerance . . . the red blight of Communism!

In each of those nations the Press is in chains. In each of them free speech and free presentation of the news is forbidden. The papers print, and the people read, only what a dictator permits.

That's how despotism is created and preserved. That's why Napoleon admitted that if he allowed freedom of the Press his power could not last six weeks. That's why the autocrats of Europe have hand-cuffed their nations' newspapers.

Such things aren't happening in America today. The newspaper on which you rely for knowledge of what goes on—in the world and in your home town alike—gives you the facts undistorted by the hand of a Dictator. Here the Press is free—and with it the people.

Who kept it that way? It was the newspapers and the men who make them—supported of course by the public. Throughout our history they have fought to retain the freedom of speech and of the Press that was written into the Constitution and the Bill of Rights.

Their fight was not dominated by self-interest—for newspapers, as Europe has proved, can survive under a Dictator's thumb and profit by his favors. It was, instead, a fight for all the people.

The newspapers knew—and know today—that an enslaved Press means an enslaved populace. They realize that so long as the Press remains free, and its editors courageous, America can never fall under the iron hand of despotism or dictatorship.

They remain, as always, the shock troops of our liberty.

To them is due our appreciation—and our support. Freedom of speech and freedom of the Press are every citizen's concern.

1936 Master De Luxe and Standard Chevrolets are Replete with New Features

New Master De Luxe and Standard Chevrolets for 1936 show marked advances in appearance and in engineering. Perfected hydraulic brakes, high-compression engines with full-length water jackets, and balanced carburetion are among the mechanical improvements. The solid steel Turret Top Fisher body is now used on the Standard as well as the Master De Luxe models.

HIDDEN VALUE!

It takes an expert to recognize and appreciate the fabulous value of an old violin made by a master craftsman. But any farmer who USES his telephone realizes the great value that is hidden in that every-day business aid. One call may result in a large extra profit, or a saving on a purchase. It may bring the veterinarian to save the life of a valuable farm animal, or the fire department to prevent ruinous damage to home and buildings. You never know when a call is going to be worth many times the cost of service. Yet, no matter how much it saves or earns, the telephone costs only the same small sum.

We guarantee you will be out-talked or your money gladly refunded. NERTZ.

Well would you believe it, but the "Copperstopped" club has doubled its membership. It now has TWO members. It must run in the relation, it sho must.

Harvey, Harvey and more Harvey—what has this town got that a couple of boys manage to go there every weekend. We just cant imagine, but on second thought could it be a couple of girls. Say JUNE for instance. I bet not.

Can you possible imagine a young lad attending a certain junior college and being lucky enough to have a warm spot in the heart of the best looking girl in the college, and then believe it or not, he shows no interest in her so's you'd notice it. He must have a cold heart not to succumb to her feminine wiles. 'At

More admirers every week, that's what a certain little girl seems to have. Wonder who she is? I couldn't possibly say, but just ask some of the fellows. She sure has them ga-ga.

By now you've probably all heard of the next big boxing match that is to be promoted by the Tinley Youth's Organization, Wednesday, November 20. HERE comes a yarn that will knock you loose from your goose-pimples. It comes to me from Tom Barclay, and it's got all the ingredients of a good old-fashioned melodrama. Everything is there but the sawmill, and in place of that you've got the British army, a prairie fire and a ton or so of ammunition, all conspiring to snatch the lives of Tom and his sworn enemy, Bill Davidson. So cock an ear this way, lads and lassies, and listen to what happened to Tom and Bill in South Africa in the spring of 1902.

It was toward the end of the Boer war. Tom, with about 30 other white men, was bossing a gang of Kaffirs who were building roads for the British government about 80 miles north of Pretoria. Some British troops had been through that section of the country a few days before, and to lighten the loads they were carrying, had dumped a lot of ammunition on the veldt just outside the road-builders' camp. The whole neighborhood was strewn with the stuff—mostly rifle cartridges, for artillery wasn't used as much in the Boer war as it was later on in the big European mix-up.

The discarded cartridges were left right where they lay. Nobody thought much about them. But there came a time when both Tom and his enemy, Bill Davidson, wished devoutly that the British soldiers hadn't been so careless with their hardware.

Bill Davidson was another one of the gang bosses at the camp. He and Tom always seemed to be getting on each other's nerves. And one night, during a card game, somebody called somebody else a liar, and the first thing you know, Tom and Bill were outside that tent getting ready to have a fight.

This Was a Fire That Was More Than Fire.

They decided they'd have their fight out on the veldt, where there would be no one around watching them, and they started out, walking through the thick grass in a northerly direction from the camp. They hadn't gone more than a couple hundred yards before they both cooled off considerably and decided that they were just a pair of plain chuckle-heads to be fighting about a darned card game. "Let's take a walk around the kopje," said Bill, "and keep the boys wondering a while."

Tom agreed. They headed for a small hill a short distance away and began to swing around it. They were about half-way around, and completely out of sight of the camp, when, crossing a ridge in the hill, they ran full tilt into a raging veldt fire.

It wasn't anything unusual. The dry grass of the South African veldt often caught fire and burned for days. But as they turned to go back they heard a spattering explosion like a burst of rifle fire, and bullets began whistling past their ears. The fire had moved into an area where a lot of discarded rifle ammunition lay on the ground, and the bullets were exploding.

Death Awaited Him Who Would Retreat.

To try to run back would have been suicide. The fire was spreading almost as fast as they could move, and the whole veldt was an inferno of flying lead. But a few yards up the hillside was a large rock. They ran for the cover of that rock—made it, and crouched down behind it. They had not reached it a moment too soon, for a second later, a veritable barrage of lead whistled over their heads as the fire exploded a fresh bunch of cartridges.

"That rock," says Tom, "saved our lives, but we didn't get through the experience entirely unharmed. As the fire crept round to the other side of us, we were showered with lead from behind. I got a bullet in the left forearm, and then, to make matters worse, the fire began moving up on us, too. It came so close that our hair was singed and our clothes were blackened with soot."

"The smoke was choking us, but we didn't dare run for it. Then a bullet got Bill in the left foot, and we couldn't run. We had to stay there until the veldt all around us was burned black as a cinder. Then Bill tied my wounded arm up with a handkerchief and I bandaged up his foot with part of his shirt."

"After that came the struggle to get Bill to the top of the kopje, and what a time I had of it. When we got to the top of the hill, though, the men back in the camp could see us, and some of them came out to get us. After that, my troubles were over."

Tom's troubles were over, but the rest of the men in the camp had a hard time trying to figure out how two birds who had been at each other's throats for months could go through a little veldt fire and hot lead and come out of it the best of friends. From that time on Bill and Tom were buddies, and when, three years later, Bill was killed in a railroad accident outside of Capetown, Tom felt as though the world had fallen on him. That jam they had been in out there on the burning kopje had cemented a friendship that was only broken by the all-destroying hand of death.

what Irvin S. Cobb thinks about:

Gray Ghosts.

SANTA BARBARA, CALIF.—Wearing uniforms of weathered gray, the shades of several ancestors came to me as I slept and wanted to know if it was true that practically all the old-line Republicans in New England were ready to spring to arms against the New Dealers in defense of the sacred doctrine of states' rights.

I said such was indeed the case, and they said if those d—n Yankees had only seen the light a heap sooner, the Cobb family would've been saved a lot of bother, in 1861 and wouldn't have gone busted in 1865.

I told them there had been no noticeable change since '65—the Cobb family was still busted. So they faded away.

I thought it might have been a dream, but when I woke up there still lingered the faint ghostly aromas of bourbon toddies and fried ham.

Irvin S. Cobb

The President's Proclamation.

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT started something with his proclamation warning United States citizens off ships belonging to the warring nations, following the one against selling to either of them munitions or deadly arms. The second order disappoints the thousands of tourists, especially those from the southern states, who'd arranged for winter cruises aboard Ethiopian boats, and the earlier one was a serious blow to those American producers who'd counted on selling Italy increased stocks of her favorite weapon. I refer to our garlic growers.

Think of all that stuff piling up in the warehouses over here and not nearly enough gas masks to go around! And, with the supply cut off, think of the defenseless populace over there! The last time I was in Naples, about every other person I met either had eaten too much garlic or not enough. And when I moved on to Rome, I appreciated the old saying, "When in Rome be an aroma." Still I must admit that I now feel toward garlic as I do toward our celebrated California climate—I like it, but not to excess.

Uncle Sam and Sanctions.

ALL we have to go by are the dispatches, which may be wrong; but if I were an Italian out in Ethiopia and a fortune teller had said to me lately, "I seem to see you going on a long journey where you'll meet some dark stranger who will be very antagonistic," I know I'd be homesick and I reckon probably I'd start doing a little serious thinking.

And if I were Mussolini, I'd be saying to myself that maybe I made a mistake by not considering the example of another great champion, John L. Sullivan. Any time the prospect was for a close fight, John L. drew the color-line.

And if I were Uncle Sam—as indeed, in our small ways, we all are part of him—I'd answer those mash-notes which will be pouring in pretty soon, bearing foreign postmarks, by stating that I positively was not going into the "sanctions" business. The name may be new, but the smell is both reminiscent and suspicious. In fact, it's the same old smell.

The Head That Wears a Crown.

WHAT with one of the leading movie families having what delicately is known out here as a rift, the dispatches from Greece just did make the front pages of some of the papers. This is the center of the rifting industry, and the daily quotations are eagerly followed.

The news must've created a stir, though, in Europe, which is dotted with many an "ex," marking the spot when a bounced monarch landed. Any revival in the king business, which for years was so sluggish, will be welcomed by interested parties. I seem to hear Wilhelm telling the hired girl to get the crown off the parlor what-not and give it a wipe.

Still, King George might do well to book return passage before heading for Athens to remount the skittish throne that bucked him off once. Except when running restaurants, the Greeks are great hands for switching around.

A Pocketful of Change.

MR. HOOVER says that, at the end of this administration, our unpaid government obligations will exceed thirty-five billions, whereupon Senate Leader Robinson indignantly shrieks that, on June 30, 1936, the total national debt will approximate only thirty billions, seven hundred and twenty-four millions and some odd change.

But to any orthodox member of the last congress, what's a mere bagatelle of four or five billions? The boys toss those trifles off the same as Detroit batting in runs in the ninth inning of a world's series game. And anyhow, doesn't it still give us six full months next year to overtake the Hoover estimate? Why, it'll be like taking candy from a taxpayer.

Washington.—In days not so far in the distant past, an argument could be developed in any community where there were more than a handful of Democrats if one took the position that the rights of the federal government were predominant over states' rights. States' rights constituted an issue that never died politically until the New Deal arrived on the scene at Washington. Through some two years or more now, we had heard very little about states' rights. Yet, within the last few days, we have found that the states' rights issue was not dead. It was only sleeping, and it has come to life in a really big way.

New Deal policies have been consistently policies of centralization of power in the hands of the federal government. New Dealers have enacted much legislation and have carried out many programs that appear to be contrary to the views which used to be held by advocates of states' rights. These things have been accomplished with almost no complaint from the Democratic side and with only a minimum of squawking from New Deal opposition from whence came complaints about regimentation and extension of government functions into the field of private enterprise in competition with the government's citizens.

Lately, however, some thirty or thirty-five cities have awakened with a shock and have rendered one New Deal program a severe jolt by that awakening. I refer to the plans for government construction of the so-called low cost housing projects. These were and are intended to provide apartments or small homes for families in the very low income brackets and to provide work for labor in their construction. Eventually, it was hoped, the program would use up a good many hundred million dollars of work-relief funds. Some have already been spent; some projects have been completed, and these results coincided with the arrival of tax paying time in certain localities. That was the crux.

To show what has happened in those cities and areas wherein the low cost housing projects have been planned or completed, let us take a particular case, namely, the housing project in Atlanta, Georgia. It is of no use to cite the facts in all of them, because the Atlanta case is typical.

Secretary Ickes and his Public Works administration had spent approximately three million dollars in the construction of the Atlanta housing layout. No sooner had this been accomplished, however, than the city of Atlanta awakened to the fact that it would get no taxes nor will the state of Georgia get taxes from this great investment. The project was ruled by Comptroller General J. R. McCarl to be federally owned. As such, it was not subject to state or municipal taxation. The city of Atlanta and the state of Georgia had been deriving taxes from the real estate now owned by Uncle Sam.

It was Atlanta's turn to move. It announced through its properly constituted city authorities that if there were no taxes, then Atlanta could not furnish fire and police protection for the property nor could it supply water for the tenants nor would it permit children of those tenants to attend the Atlanta schools as free students. Atlanta contended that it bears the burden of these expenses and it was not going to add to that burden without reimbursement.

Secretary Ickes sought then to offset the Atlanta ultimatum by tendering funds, taxpayer's money, to the city of Atlanta equal to the amount he thought the city would receive in taxes. Again, Mr. McCarl stepped in. He said that since the property was owned by the federal government it was not subject to taxes and therefore a payment to the city of Atlanta out of federal funds constituted a gratuity. In other words, it was an illegal proposition.

The comptroller general's ruling was so definite and positive that those who have been boosting and boasting about low cost housing projects have been stunned. Frankly, they do not know which way to turn. Thus far, they have not discovered a ray of light to lead them. The housing projects are held in abeyance.

The housing project situation brings to the fore a condition which apparently had not been generally recognized. It relates, of course, to the general subject of taxation but it has a bearing upon many policies now operative and which, it is fair to say, have been described by President Roosevelt as experimental. Since they are experimental, it seems to me they ought to be examined from this taxation phase.

One can understand readily the base of the objection. There is hardly a city or town or even any other kind of taxing district in the United States where the tax rates are not at the very peak which the people can carry. That was shown most vividly a year ago when Congress thought it necessary to enact legislation permitting municipalities the privilege of declaring themselves virtually bankrupts and according them the right of compromising with their bondholders under a decree of a United States court. So, when we think of taking away taxable property in any city and making it non-taxable by conversion from private to federal government ownership, we see how it adds a further burden of taxes to the remaining privately owned property. That is the reason why many municipalities are fearful of government ownership of railroads, for example, since the railroads are heavy taxpayers in every community they serve. Laying aside the question of merit or lack of merit in the proposition of government ownership of railroads, no municipality can afford to overlook the loss of tax receipts that would follow government acquisition of those carrier properties. They pay real estate taxes in the United States annually of more than three hundred million dollars. Of course it is distributed in thousands of places but whatever the amount may be in your community or any other, it represents a tax source which the local government can ill afford to lose.

It is the same, although to a lesser degree, with respect to the housing project. In this statement I mean only as to the local tax phase. It has, however, another very important tax angle. Property, or the income from property, everywhere is subjected to three tax assessments. First, the county or city in which the property is located takes a tax toll; second, the state gets a share, and thirdly, the federal government either by income or some other tax gets its hand into the pocket of a property owner.

In the case of the low cost housing project, it was necessary to calculate the rental rate on a base so low that it would be impossible for the total receipts to pay off the government investment. This had to be done if the low cost housing was to be supplied at a rate the poorer classes could pay. It is seen, therefore, that there was a deficit staring the project in the face. To meet this deficit certain federal funds were to be set aside regularly which, coupled with the receipts from the tenants, would serve to amortize the original cost. From the standpoint of liquidating the cost of the building, this is fine but it does not impress one as being so wholesome when it is shown that the government's contribution comes out of the general fund of the Treasury which in turn comes out of the general taxpayers of the nation.

And so it is with a great many other of the experiments where such programs place government-owned agencies or industries in competition with citizens. Take the Tennessee Valley hydro-electric project for another example. The federal government has placed more than $131,000,000 in that venture. The present Tennessee Valley Corporation has taken over these properties at about one-third of this amount—a net loss to the government. But that is not all. The vast project that has been developed in the Tennessee valley and through the adjoining counties and cities is not subject to state taxation nor do the cities that are being served by Tennessee river electricity get any taxes from this source. It may be sound in the theory but I am fearful that the inbred opposition to federal government encroachment on local affairs sooner or later will cause a new explosion. It will come from the original feeling that state's rights ought to be superior to federal rights except where states have delegated that authority to the federal government in the national Constitution.

Earlier in this discussion I mentioned the ruling by Comptroller General McCarl who acted, of course, as the head of the general accounting office. This agency was created with a very definite purpose in mind. Congress wanted some independent group or authority to watch all federal expenditures to make certain that they were made in accordance with law. A good many years ago when this job was done by the comptroller of the treasury, it was not infrequent that an adverse ruling by the comptroller put the comptroller in a tough spot.

Mr. McCarl is not popular. Privately and publicly, he has been criticized, sometimes in language hardly printable. These complaints always have come from someone whose idea of spending money was found by Mr. McCarl not to be in accordance with the law. Always, he was the goat.

He has been the goat much more under the New Deal than ever before. Every time he kicks over a New Deal plan, the sponsors of that plan brand him as a Tory or a Reactionary or as being just plain dumb. He has engaged in controversy with none of them. He has contended that his decisions were rendered in accordance with the law which he was directed by congress to construe. But it is true of all humans. When a pet plan is destroyed, one tries to find somebody upon whom the blame can be pinned.

Lesson for November 10

EZEKIEL TEACHES PERSONAL RESPONSIBILITY

LESSON TEXT—Ezekiel 33:7-16.
GOLDEN TEXT—So then every one of us shall give account of himself to God.—Romans 14:12.
PRIMARY TOPIC—A Prophet Encourages His People.
JUNIOR TOPIC—A Watchman on Duty.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Does God Care What I Do?
YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Individuals Accountable to God.

Ezekiel prophesied in the land of the captivity. The purpose of his ministry was threefold: (1) To show the house of Israel that they were in captivity because of their sins (14:23). (2) To show that God is righteous in his visitation of judgment upon them (7:8, 9). (3) To sustain their faith by assuring them of their national restoration, the punishment of their enemies and their final exaltation among the nations when Messiah shall reign.

I. God's Sovereign Right to the Souls of Men (18:1-4).
Every man is personally responsible to God.

II. The Moral Obligation of Sons to Their Father (Ezek. 18:14-20).
While the law of heredity gives the child a sinful nature and when the child arrives at the age of moral responsibility it begins to sin, God holds such responsible for their deeds.

III. Ezekiel's Responsibility (Ezek. 33:1-9).

As a prophet of God certain responsibilities were imposed upon him. There is a sense in which every disciple of Christ is a witness for him and therefore is responsible for the giving of his testimony to sinners. His responsibility is set forth under the figure of a watchman. Two things were required of a watchman.

1. To hear the words of God's mouth (v. 7). The source of the message of every minister and Sunday School teacher is God's holy Word. Just as the prophet did not originate his message but received it of God's mouth, so it should be with every minister and Sunday School teacher.

2. To sound the warning (v. 7). After hearing God's message he was to speak it out and proclaim it to the people. A watchman today is both to hear and to speak. The people are to be warned of the impending danger. Failure to sound the alarm makes the watchman guilty of the blood of the sinner.

IV. God's Attitude Toward the Sinner (vv. 10, 11).

God has declared in his Word that unfaithfulness on the part of his people would cause them to "perish among the heathen," that they would "pine away in their iniquity" (Lev. 26:38, 39). In view of this pronouncement some are disposed to say that their case is hopeless. To meet this attitude of despair the prophet assured them that God had no pleasure in the death of the wicked, but that his sincere desire was for the wicked to turn from their way and live. Regardless of what their past had been, they were given the assurance that the future was bright if they heeded God's command and plea. No one need to despair because of sin, for God's grace is greater than human sin.

V. The Sinner's Personal Responsibility (vv. 12-20).

God created the members of the race personal beings, giving them freedom of choice. They have moral discernment enabling them to distinguish between the right and the wrong. They choose, therefore, according to the quality of their being.

The following principles govern the sinner:

1. Past righteousness will not avail for present sins (v. 12). When a righteous man turns to iniquity, his past seeming righteousness will be of no avail.

2. Past sins do not make impossible present acceptance with God (vv. 12-15). By virtue of the operation of the law of habit, every sinful act makes it harder for the sinner to repent, but God's grace is such that if the sinner repents God will forgive and restore.

3. Restitution required (vv. 15, 16). The proof of penitence is that, so far as possible, the sinner makes amends for wrongs done.

4. God's ways are equal (vv. 17-20). God holds man responsible for his own deeds. The child is not condemned because of the deeds of his father, nor can it be said that the fathers have eaten sour grapes and the children's teeth are set on edge. This does not do away with the law of heredity. Regardless of what one's past life has been, God's grace in Jesus Christ blots out his record and he stands accepted in the Beloved.

Friends

Friends are as companions of a journey, who ought to aid each other, as preservers on the road to a happier life.—Pythagoras.

A Mother's Love

If there be aught surpassing human deed or word or thought, it is a mother's love!—De Spradaro.

Force

The power that is supported by force alone will have cause often to tremble.—Kossuth.

Nature's Ice Box O. K.; Keeps Food 33 Years

Nature's ice box has even the best of mechanical refrigerators skinned when it comes to food preservation. Keeping food in good condition for years is no trick at all for natural cold storage plants such as the Antarctic wastes. According to Dr. Dana Coman, physician and dietician for the Lincoln Ellsworth-Sir Hubert Wilkins expedition, food left in a shack in the South Polar region 33 years ago was found to be still edible when discovered. The long-preserved food supplies were left by a Norwegian explorer, Otto Nordenskjöld, in 1902.—Washington Post.

Our Conscience

Conscience is not merely a quality that inspires regret; it is often a principle that removes the faintest desire to do wrong in the first place.

"X" MARKS SPOT

A business man, who enjoyed spending "a night out with the boys" now and then, had a friend to stay with him for the week-end. When the guest was being shown up to his room he noticed that there were faint crosses on several of the steps. He asked the reason. "Ah," whispered the host, "these come into operation after midnight. X means that the step creaks."—Capper's Weekly.

The Citadel of Our Freedom

By RAYMOND PITCAIRN
National Chairman
Sentinels of the Republic

The Supreme Court of the United States meets this session in its new home across from the Capitol at Washington.

Beautiful and impressive, the structure cost some $9,000,000 to build. That, it has been pointed out, is about half the price of a battleship.

But, as a defender of our freedom, the Supreme Court building with all that it represents is many times more valuable than any dreadnaught.

The battleship guards us against dangers from without.

The Supreme Court—as protector and interpreter of the Constitution—guards our government and our freedom against dangers from within.

It is the Supreme Court that says "Stop" when our personal liberty or the safeguarding provisions of our Constitution are violated.

It is the citadel of our freedom.

There have been efforts—both past and recent—to weaken that citadel.
There have been attempts to transfer the powers vested in the Supreme Court to other branches of government.
Firmly the people have resisted such proposals. Emphatically they have demonstrated that they want no stone removed from the fortress that guards their constitutional rights.

And they are right. They know that when that fortress falls, the freedom assured them under the Constitution can perish with it.

Remember, it was the Declaration of Independence that won our freedom; it was the Constitution that preserved it;
and it is the Supreme Court that protects it.

TINLEY AND ORLAND
WOMEN ATTEND
BEVERLY MEETING

Longwood Drive and 95th street.
During the morning session which started at 10:30 o'clock, the following resolutions were presented and adopted: To oppose lynching in this country; to assist in the work of cancer control; that this country should enter the World Court, this motion received a goodly number of nay votes, but the ayes carried; also the birth-control measure called forth many nay votes but was subsequently carried by the ayes; universal finger printing; and that the people of the District of Columbia should have the privilege of voting in our country's elections.

Dinner was served in the gymnasium.
The afternoon session opened at 1:30 with music by the Beverly Hills
Woman's club chorus.

An outstanding feature was when the singing portrait painter, Jerome
Uhl of Paris, New York and Chicago painted the portrait of our Third district president, Mrs. A. H. Swet, while the large assembly of women watched.

At the close of the meeting a visit to the Vanderpoel Art gallery was made and all the splendid paintings were viewed. Tea was also served.

A goodly number of women from Tinley Park and Orland Park Women's clubs attended this meeting.
